The View
From My Window
WITH PASTOR JOEL

I was attacked by some pancakes the other day. They were delicious – light, fluffy & sweet. They looked innocent enough & they went down easily. There were only two of them, but once they hit the bottom of my stomach they unveiled 'phase two' of their insidious plan of attack.

I pushed away from the table shortly after the last bite slid happily down my gullet. I paused thinking that a few more bites would have been nice but, alas, my plate was empty. Moments later with the food resting comfortably in the pit of my stomach, those cakes began to expand much like a life raft after the cord has been pulled. It felt more like I'd eaten two tires off my car than just a couple of pancakes. Worse – guilt began to assail my emotions as I chastised myself for not stopping at one pancake. I envisioned myself pouring more & more syrup on my breakfast while my waistline expanded, popping buttons, snapping my belt, & splitting my stomach!

"Knowing When" is the topic of today's text. May God help us to know when to start, when to stop, when to speak up & when to stay quiet.
