The View from My Window

with Pastor Joel

This morning we're going to talk about the skill of self-management: the ability to adjust our reactions and responses to others and to situations so that we contribute appropriately to the narrative. Proper feedback helps to calm others down, defuse circumstances and make things better for most, if not all, involved. Are you one who generally helps to lower the temperature in the room or often "raise the roof"? Do you help others feel safe or frequently regret what you've said or done?

The Holy Spirit is a champion of self-management who produces all the good qualities that make us peacemakers in times of conflict, soothers in times of trauma, and encouragers when discouragement looms overhead. Allow Him to speak healing, peace and faith into your spirit today, developing those qualities that make us more like Jesus.
