The View from My Window

with Pastor Joel

Keep fasting: My flesh is squirrely; it keeps finding ways to express itself and assert its dark ways even as I strive to follow Jesus. I can be proud of how humble I've become, satisfied with my spiritual growth, distracted by good works I'm involved in, none of which is good. Perhaps worst of all for me is when my appetite for sweets gets ahold of me. I'll be doing just fine avoiding those foods that are low on nutrition and high on calories for months. I feel good. I'm satisfied. But then, for whatever reason, I "take a taste". "Surely, I can handle a taste." "All things in moderation." "A little doesn't hurt." Although all those statements are true, they lead to my ruin. I start with a taste, perhaps a cookie. A cookie a day isn't bad. A cookie a day becomes two that eventually leads to cake and what is cake without ice cream? My pants get tight, my shirts snug. What happened? My flesh did it to me again; it squirreled its way back into convincing me I'm starving 24/7 and need another bite of whatever.

Oh, to be in control again! That's one of the reasons a season of fasting is so important to me. Self-control is a fruit of the Spirit. When I'm out from under self-control I know I'm not under the Spirit's control to the degree I need to be. Looking forward to fasting is like looking forward to going to the dentist but it's also looking forward to a new birth of freedom from my addictions. Start yearning to be free from things that hold you back: anger, bad habits, painful thoughts, etc. Then ask God to help you formulate a plan to break those chains that bind you. Let that be your fasting journey for 2021.
