The View from My Window

with Pastor Joel

My mother-in-law was one of the most self-deferring, humble persons I've ever known. If you took her out to eat, she'd rarely order more than a bowl of soup even though I knew her to have a healthy appetite. If she found out you were going to throw away some left-overs she'd find a way to eat them regardless of how much she'd already consumed because, as a child of the depression, she never wasted any food. She always made sure everyone had as much as they could eat before she'd put much on her plate. She was always more comfortable serving than being served.

It was actually difficult to bless that woman without getting paid back double. All of that goes on her resume for sainthood and I don't mean to detract from that at all. Ruth Duff was truly a remarkable, godly woman. But even the saintliest of us has a right to exist, to take up space, to breathe the air, eat some food and live a little. It doesn't always have to be about everyone else.

In fact, God intends to lavish strength and gifts on you so people will not only know you've been here but that you've helped change their world. Some people are too big for their britches but others of us need to grow up into ours. Find your niche in the Kingdom and fill it, fill it all the way up.
