The View from My Window with Pastor Joel

Tomorrow is my birthday. I'll be 65. I've signed up for Medicare. I should probably start looking around for any deals on funeral arrangements, headstones and cemetery plots. If you see any coupons for such things, let me know. I read recently about a family whose loved one passed away. They decided he needed a new suit to be buried in. They went to Penny's (a few years ago) and picked out a suit they liked. The salesman said, "You're in luck. This week there's a sale on: you get an extra pair of pants for free!"

The truth is, none of us knows how much time we have. Just the other day a pickup crested the hill I was driving toward and kept drifting further and further into my lane until he was ¾ of the way across the yellow line. I laid on the horn and hit the brakes. He swerved back into his own lane. I was surprised at how hard my heart was beating. Maybe I'm not as ready to go as I thought! Or maybe it's like Andy Stanley says, "I don't mind being dead; it's getting dead that concerns me."
